Elizabeth Bradfield, associate professor of the practice of English, co-director of creative writing at Brandeis, and marine naturalist, worked for 28 years as an expedition guide on ships in Alaska, Antarctica, and the Arctic. She is particularly interested in the ways literature and science together expand our ability to understand and connect to the world around us. Provincetown, where she has lived and worked since the late 1990s, has a strong connection to the Azores; many of the whalers who called this port home came from those islands, and the culture and connection across the Atlantic remains strong. Liz's seven books include SOFAR: Poems, which includes poems published in The Atlantic Monthly, The Sun, and Orion; Interpretive Work, which won the Audre Lorde Award for Lesbian Poetry; Toward Antarctica: An Exploration; and the co-created Cascadia Field Guide: Art, Ecology, Poetry, winner of a Pacific Northwest Book Award.
